The man who strove for peace lies buried now in the illustrious company of Britain's great. Those who paid him their last public tribute at the Abbey service numbered the most eminent in all walks of life. Lord Halifax mourned a leader and a friend.

Mr. Hore-Belisha. Lord and Lady Simon. Lady Oxford and Asquith. M. Maisky, the Soviet Ambassador. The Minister of Saudi Arabi. Mr. Duff-Cooper. General Sikorski, Prime Minister of Poland and the Polish Ambassador. Mr. Ernest Bevin. Just as the mourners came from all freedom-loving nations, so did they come from all sections of the people. Mr. Montague Norman, and Mr. Chamberlain's close friend, Sir Horace Wilson.

The Prime Minister mourned a loyal colleague. His Majesty was represented by the Duke of Gloucester.

In the Abbey they sang "The Labourer's Task Is O'er," a fitting hymn, for in the country's service Neville Chamberlain had laboured almost till the hour he died.

The Archbishop of Canterbury assisted the Dean of Westminster in the last obsequies.

The mourners quietly departed.

Sir Charles Portal, Lord Londonderry and Sir John Dill.

Here are some members of the Chamberlain family.

Dimly the watchers glimpsed the sad figure of the widow.

Neville Chamberlain's burden has been transferred to other shoulders. Fight for the victory he passionately desired will go on.
