At Saclay France has opened an Atomic Research establishment, to play much the same part in all fields of French atomic development as Harwell does in Britain. It is also a training ground for scientists and technicians specialising in this new and most important branch of knowledge. In addition to the practical side /the library and teaching facilities are perhaps the finest on the Continent. France does not intend to be left behind in the atomic race, witness this research station covering more than 300 acres.
