

Wales took the field first at Pontypridd for the match against England. Have a good look at them because ~~they were the same as the team in white shirts~~ later on you may not recognise them. England were the team in white shirts --- it would have been better if they'd worn grey and saved the laundry. Wales attacked first, but by this time torrential rain had begun to fall, but as long as the ball floats footballers don't care. In the second half the rain was worse and although England scored a penalty goal we can't show it because the cameraman ~~had~~ sank. Wales scored three points with a try when Edwards took the ball and raced over the line, ~~but the referee failed to award the try~~ <sup>by 3 points to 2</sup> and Wales won ~~three two~~ --- but Mother was it worth it?

ACCORDION BAND.

It is Accordion Day 1936 --- and from all over Britain experts have crowded into Central Hall for the Massed Bands Championships. There's nothing like a little music to make it home sweet home!
