

WEDDING.

411

From the Palace of Holyroodhouse lent by the King and Queen, the Duchess of Northumberland drove to her daughter's wedding. Lady Elizabeth Percy, who was given away by her brother the Duke, travelled through the cheering crowds of Edinburgh to St Giles' Cathedral for the ceremony which would unite her to the young Marquess of Douglas and Clydesdale. The lovely silver dress of the bride and the Douglas tartan of the groom's full Highland dress, contrasted brilliantly in the flashlights with the unkind gloom that hung ^{over} the Scottish capital. They drove to the Assembly Rooms, where the Duchess of Northumberland held a reception for 2,000 guests and Gaumont British News has the privilege of presenting these pictures which will appear in no other newsreel. Everybody remembers from school history books the story of the feud between the Douglasses and the Percys. Six centuries ago a Douglas led a Border raid to York and captured the famous Percy, Harry Hotspur. To-day that feud is over --- the Marquess of Douglas and Clydesdale has for his bride the charming descendant of Hotspur --- Lady Elizabeth Percy.
