

481
LONDON AFTER DARK.

This is the time of year when people start telling you the evenings are drawing in. So Gaumont British News tells everybody at once to save a lot of trouble. With a special highly-sensitised film we present these pictures of our capital in the twilight. ^

City of Romance --- even the trams on the Embankment have glamour as well as clamour, and Londoners on holiday will be glad to see that the old place is still able to carry on without them.

~~Westminster Bridge. The House of Commons is shattered and dark, for Parliament is in recess.~~

Out to Croydon --- where the great business of commercial aviation carries on through the night. With a swimming pool nearby, floodlit for tired travellers. But here there is sometimes a crash on the landing gear.

Piccadilly, the hub of the universe, rivaling Broadway as a free picture-show.

The Strand --- corridor from City to West End --- from work to whoopee.

~~And Trafalgar Square. The fountains are never stopping~~
And Trafalgar Square. Yes, the evenings are drawing in. Watching over a sleeping city, Nelson now closes the other eye. And London is saying good-night.