

MOWING, PLANE FARMING AND HUNTING.

The amateur gardener can now enjoy a game of cards and mow the lawn at the same time, thanks to this wonderful new invention. All you have to do is press a button and the mower runs round working all by itself. It thus leaves the amateur gardener free to work up a thirst in some other way. It's a marvellous idea, as long as it doesn't decide to go for a stroll round the drawing-room carpet.

And now another great idea from North Carolina --- Farmer Brown has an aeroplane to speed the plough. Not only does it speed the plough --- it also keeps the farmer cool and throws the dust into his face. ~~After the ploughing he gathers the harvest.~~ If any farmer wants to know why he gathers the harvest so soon after ploughing, it's because we've had such a very short summer. He starts up the engine and away it goes. ~~What the harvest, of course.~~ Away goes

For relaxation the farmer hunts. . . . the Oaklands Club of Australia celebrates its fiftieth anniversary. In England some people say the fox likes hunting. In Australia he doesn't, so he gets a hare to act as understudy. It's a blood-starring sport --- and our Australian commentator gets all worked up about it. Bung-ho!
