

(810)

ZOO POULTRY AUCTION.

On a recent afternoon, the London Zoo assumed a novel setting-- for they were holding a big show and sale of poultry and appliances in aid of a well-deserved charity.

It was a proud day for the hens-- for the time being they were the centre of attraction.

Lord Iliffe, who opened the show, made an impressive entrance <sup>Sitting on the back of a camel.</sup> ~~on camel back~~. He was supported by Miss Ruby Miller-- a glittering star of former days, ~~xxxxx~~ <sup>glittering</sup> and a star-to-be, Miss Jeanne Ravel.

Up on the auctioneers stand <sup>with</sup> Lord Iliffe ~~introduced a~~ wealth of guests prominent in the world of the theatre. Jack Jackson, the ~~xxxxx~~ dance band leader, was there and so was Judy Campbell. <sup>She</sup> ~~He~~ lent a hand at the auction, but brought no nightingale from Berkeley Square to Regent's Park.

With such a galaxy of famous artists helping ~~xxxxx~~ how could this show be anything but a success?

Anyhow they cleared £900 for the charity--- and that was the main thing.