WAR WOUNDED HELP THEMSELVES.

Over three years ago a girl started something in the Middle East to help our war wounded. Today there's many a man who owes the normal use of his limbs to her efforts. She is Miss Bramwell, a niece of Admiral Cunningham, and an expert in Occupational Therapy. At a Military hospital in Cairo, convalescent troops come every day to the handiwork classes.

They are taught to make all kinds of articles which necessitate the nimble use of arms, wrists and fingers which, through wounds, have become stiff and awkward. Many of the men delight in making toy animals out of old pieces of leather. There's quite a market for these in Cairo stores. If only we could have had them in our shops, instead of the junk with which Christmas-time exploiters did their highway robbery.

Incidentally, this is how some of the boys travel to their work. An old converted bomb trolley given them by the R.A.F.
