

NEW WEAPONS FOR US AND U.S.

It looks like a grandson of the old Sten. Maybe it is, but it's still mighty deadly for close work, as these trainees are finding out. But that's not to say we haven't some new weapons up our sleeves. For instance, this isn't a life-belt: it's the tank of a light flame-thrower. Rather like an oversize water-pistol but very effective for winking-out.

And here's how to load the new three-and-a-half-inch rocket-launcher. Based on the bazooka, and electrically fired, it's a tank-killer for infantry use, with no recoil.

Over in Maryland, President Truman checks up on some of America's new weapons ... among them a new tank, now in use in Korea, and named after General Walton Walker who was killed there whilst he was United Nations commander in the field. Next, the President operates a remote-control tank, and proceedings wind up with guns and rockets.
