

ENGLAND v. WALES; HUGBY:

England, in white, kick off at Twickenham against the Welsh in a gusty wind which looks as though it's going to make things difficult for both sides - but the game starts with a surprise. Taking a penalty kick for Wales, Terry Davies puts them three points up in the first minute!

Wales fight hard to press home their advantage - and its obviously to be a Battle of the Forwards. Any attempt by the three-quarters to break loose is quickly smothered.

Williams to Morgan - on to Welles - Thomas is tackled, and manages to pass to Davies - but Jackson brings him down. So at half-time it's still England nil, Wales three - but early in the second half Wales has another penalty chance.

Off the post - hard luck! That escape puts a little more spirit into the English - here's Buttersfield leading a three-quarter rush. Cornered, he passes to Robbins.

Robbins to Thompson - and he's over!

So England have equalised but it was the only good three-quarter movement of the game. Once again it becomes a tussel between two determined packs throwing everything into preventing the other side from breaking away. England are foiled and when the Welsh pack get the ball out to their three-quarters, it doesn't go very far before they suffer the same fate. So it ends in a draw - only the second since the war - and no Triple Crown for England or Wales.
