

1002301
61/6.

GALE WRECKS RADAR TOWER.

To the ocean radar tower, 80 miles off New York, no helicopter will fly out again. It was destroyed in a gale, and sank with all its 28 men. The big whirlybird used to bring supplies and relief crews. The tower was part of the early warning defence system. One of the last messages reported dangerous swaying. Soon afterwards, silence. The big domes contained radar equipment, and every hour of the day and night, all the year round, experts kept alert watch on the screens. It was at first hoped that the men might be safe, but hope faded. They died defending the Free World.