

FIJIANS GET INTO KHAKI

A strong whiff of the South Pacific came to Hampshire, brought to the troops there by a group of 40 men from the Fiji Islands. They performed the traditional ceremony with which they welcome strangers. The natives brew a very potent drink from the Kava plant, and if the strangers can't take it they don't think very much of him. You drink it without a pause. This pleasant tippie will not be on sale in the Nafi.

The Fijians haven't come to England to entertain the army, but to join it.

They thought the snow terrific. In Fijian dress, and letting themselves go. They had the time of their lives...So, welcome to the Army's latest recruits.
