

GO SKI-ING IN SCOTLAND.

Switzerland must look to its laurels; there's a new ski-ing centre in the Cairngorms. Though, so far, luxury hotels are in short supply, it's great country for camping. That's the view of Diana Price, her Newcastle student friends and the dog. Or you can see what the day's like before turning out, if you sleep in the car.

To get skiers to the top of the slopes there's now a chair-life. It cost £36,000 and is part of a winter-sports development scheme which will top a hundred thousand. 500 people an hour are carried up in comfort. It depends on their skill whether they come down on foot, or on other parts of the body.

Strangely enough, while conditions are ideal here in Scotland, reports say that the big Swiss resorts had warm weather and no snow at all.

In Bavaria, ski-jumping of championship class. Georg Thoma (West Germany) in the season's first international meeting. Wonder if we shall ever see anything like this in Scotland?

Ottva Saga, of Norway.

The Finnish ace, Eino Kirjonen.

Kirjonen began the season in great style, winning the contest with a jump of 240 feet.
