REALISTIC A.R.P. TEST.

Our greatest danger during this war is of waiting in a false sense of security. Neglecting precautions... leaving our gas masks at home....forgetting that the danger still hangs over us. They've got the right idea at one factory near London, where Sir John Anderson and Admiral Evans catch the staff being given a spot of realistic practice.

Perhaps I'm not giving away secrets when I say that at this factory they make Peper Goods. So they don't have much trouble about staging a fire scene. And the fire, first aid, and rescue parties, are kept so busy .... you'd almost think there was a war on.

So if ever we do have to deal with war from the air .... here's one place where they'll know what to do. And that's a moral for the whole country.
