

SOVIET SAILORS IN BRITAIN

A number of Soviet Merchant Sailors, recently arrived at British Ports, are the guests of our ~~xxx~~ shipbuilders and dockers at yards in the North. When invited to see some of the material on its way to the Red Armies, a Russian sailor chalks on a crate "We greet the Defenders of our great Fatherland", whilst a stewardess from Archangel writes "Greetings to the gallant airmen of our great country". There's a real get together spirit among the workers.

Whilst we're in dockland, let's take a llook at a really magnificent ~~array~~ array of aircraft just arrived in this country from America. Safe out of the Atlantic battle zone, they are now on their way to assembly centres. Next stage after that is where the Germans come in -and go out.
