QUENTIN REYNOLDS... OUR SPECIAL REPORTER. BACK FROM LIBYA.

I went from Moscow to Libya and found everyone very busy....

A Brigadier could give War Correspondents the latest information only in his spare time. That's typical of all the grand people who are knocking the stuffing out of Schickelgruber's "War chief in the Desert".. they call him Running Rommel now.

In this war of machines we mustn't forget that the best machines are men; and when they are men like the British in Libya, they are second to none.

I have never in my life seen anything so impressive as the way they go into battle, with a laugh on their lips, perhaps a curse on their tongues and, no doubt, a prayer in their hearts.....

Another impressive sight is the miles and miles of German and Italian prisoners streaming back across the Desert. They're the lucky ones, particularly since Schickelgruber himself has taken over command of the German Army.
