edt Germany has been promised an all-out offensive on an unprecedented scale.
That promise is being fulfilled by our bombers, in rapidly reduced bns mounting numbers. From the first, the offensive has been scientifically planned, with emphasis on the importance of hitting the vital spots in Germany's economic structure.

Photographic experts prepare details of the most vulnerable points for the guidance of pilots. According to the strategic needs of the moment, an attack is being planned on Nazi operated factories in the outskirts of Paris. The trained eyes of the expert identify his objectives from photographs such as these, on which large factories appear like small boxes and roads like narrow trenches. After the raid has taken place, pilots and observers are sent with cameras to spot the results. Normally, they ~~must~~ carry still cameras; but on this occasion they added a movie-camera as well. Up in a way, this was an historic flight. "Historic" in the sense that, thanks to the movie camera, you can go along also.

We are approaching the French Capital.

There's the leisurely Seine.

There are the tree-flanked boulevards of Paris, City of Culture.

But on the outskirts of this once proud and independent city there are factories forced to work for the German war Machine. And here is the vital spot. A concentrated area of good targets. The squares which you see being drawn, enclose the famous Goodrich Tyre Works, responsible for one quarter of the whole French tyre manufacturing output.

And now for a closer glance at target area No. 1. Notice how it looked before the raid! After the raid. What a different view.

We'll pick out the more prominent scars. First, a near miss. Then three bull-eyes, all on big buildings completely wrecked.

And don't overlook the effect of blast on nearby plant. Just to make sure - look again. That's the Goodrich Factory - That was!

Now for Target area No. 2. Another important building in the same group of works. Here's a close-up before the raid. Et Maintenant - Voila! The buildings in target area No. 1 were large, this one is larger.

The job is done and the crew turn for home. Thanks to the photographs takenen the trip, Proof Positive has been brought back of the effectiveness of the raid.

Step by step the records of our planned attack are piled up for future reference and future action. That action will be tantamount to a Second Fronting; the day when with the words of the Commander-in-Chief Bomber Command, the Third Reich will be scourged from earth to embed the thousand bomber Raids which shall appear like the gentle zephyrs of Summer before the Winter Storms.
