

MRS. ROOSEVELT SEES FOR HERSELF.

Mrs. Roosevelt, inexhaustible in energy, is determined to see all she can. At an Air Transport Auxiliary Station women pilots and mechanics of Ferry Command (despite the rain) are out to give her an insight into their work. Mrs. Roosevelt thanks them in these words.

"I'm very grateful for the welcome which you have extended, and very grateful for the opportunity to learn, which is my real reason for coming to this country. I apologise to all of you who I have made stand in the rain this morning, I think it must have been a very disagreeable experience but having lived a long while - because I spent three years at school in England - I know it's not an unusual one".

Ignoring the weather and the proximity of enemy aircraft, Mrs. Roosevelt travels on to an A.T.S. training centre to learn more. To all and sundry she has a word of praise. . Girls of a Mechanical Transport Section provide ample proof of the stout work being done by this branch of Britain's Army of uniformed women.
