THE GREAT FLOODS
ATTENDANT MISERY.

Picture.:- America's most disastrous floods continue to bring misery, destruction and death. The Connecticut River, roaring through burst banks, has desolated the valley and its cities and towns. The murky waters covering miles of territory have wrought untold damage, already amounting to millions of pounds. The unleashed fury of the Connecticut River was equalled by the Merrimack. At Hooksett, the two main bridges are demolished. At Johnstown, Pennsylvania, the waters have subsided, and the melancholy business of clearing up has commenced. Thousands of homeless have to be fed and sheltered in temporary buildings, and the fear of the dam bursting still hangs over the city.

Stores from hundreds of shops are being salvaged, but most of it is useless. Pittsburgh is gradually digging order out of chaos, but heavy snow is adding to the people's misery. Everyone is being inoculated against typhoid, the greatest menace of all. This suffering and destruction by water writes a sad page in American history.
